

It's not just teachers

Administrators are struggling to keep up with the pace of change. They want their schools to be constantly improving and high-performing, but the impacts of COVID, classroom politicization, and consistent budget pressures make their days difficult.

The role of Curriculum Director has gained much greater prominence in school ecosystems since the pandemic. They are still planning around learning loss and its impacts, but also around teachers that are unsatisfied, and the need to balance between tightly controlling resources and allowing individual teachers to have agency and latitude.

63%

of superintendents said they considered quitting during the 2020-2021 school year. One said he considered quitting three times. ¹

85%

of principals are experiencing job-related stress.

48%

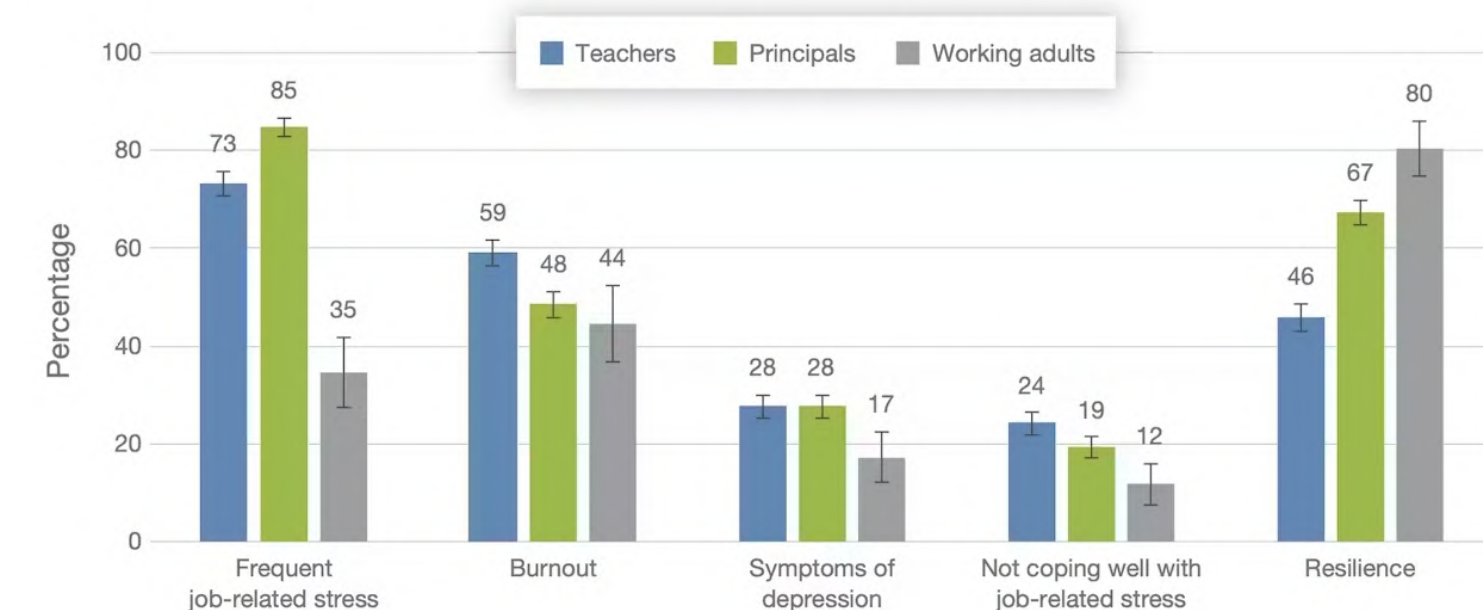

of principals are dealing with burnout, while

28%

report symptoms of depression. ²

¹: Source ²: Source

FIGURE 1
Well-Being of Teachers, Principals, and Working Adults in January 2022

Source: RAND Corporation State of the American Principal survey (2022)

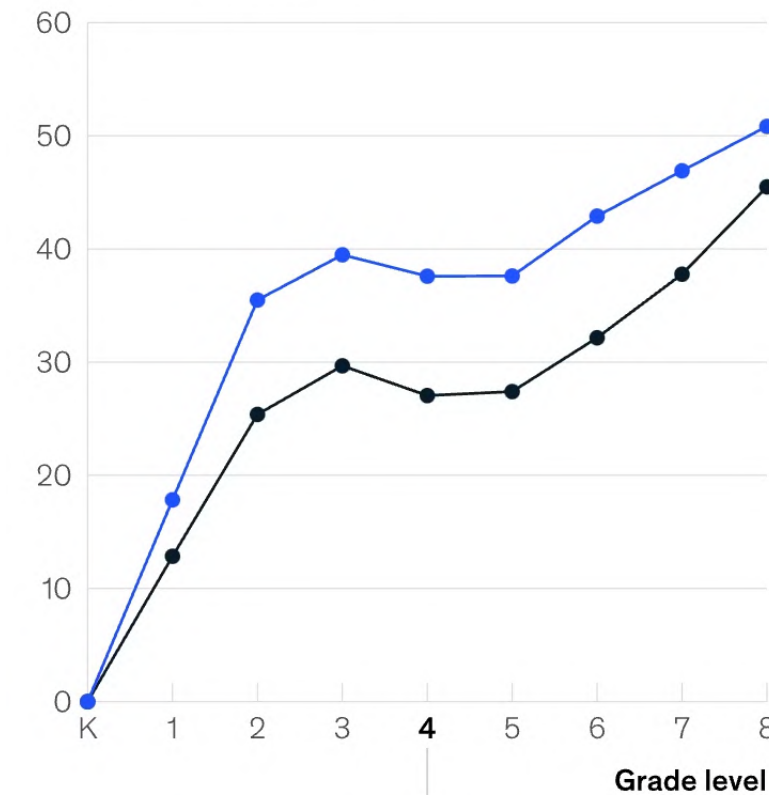

It's not just grown-ups

The pandemic has substantively changed the range of academic levels present in every class. Recent studies show pre-pandemic gaps are widening, resulting in a still greater disparity among students, and traditional differentiation strategies cannot keep up.

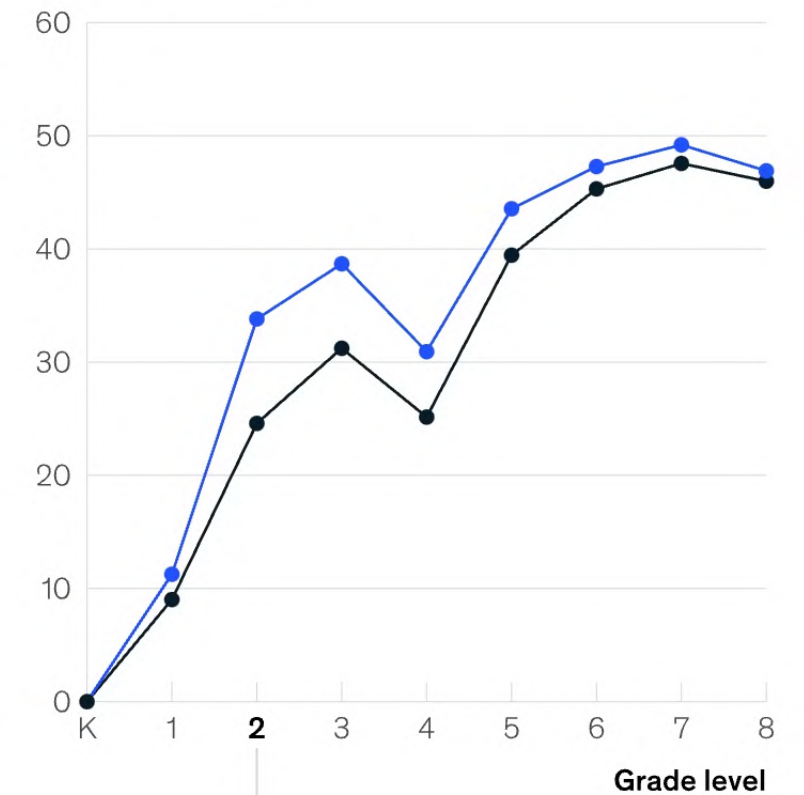

"In the United States, the variation among students within a school is typically three times greater than the variation among schools. This fall (BTS22-23), each classroom likely included students with a broad range of experiences during the past year and a half...This makes an already difficult job tougher, as teachers need to tailor their instruction to an even broader set of student needs." ¹

1: Source

Two or more grades behind in mathematics,
% of students by grade level

Two or more grades behind in reading,
% of students by grade level

Source: Curriculum Associates i-Ready assessment data

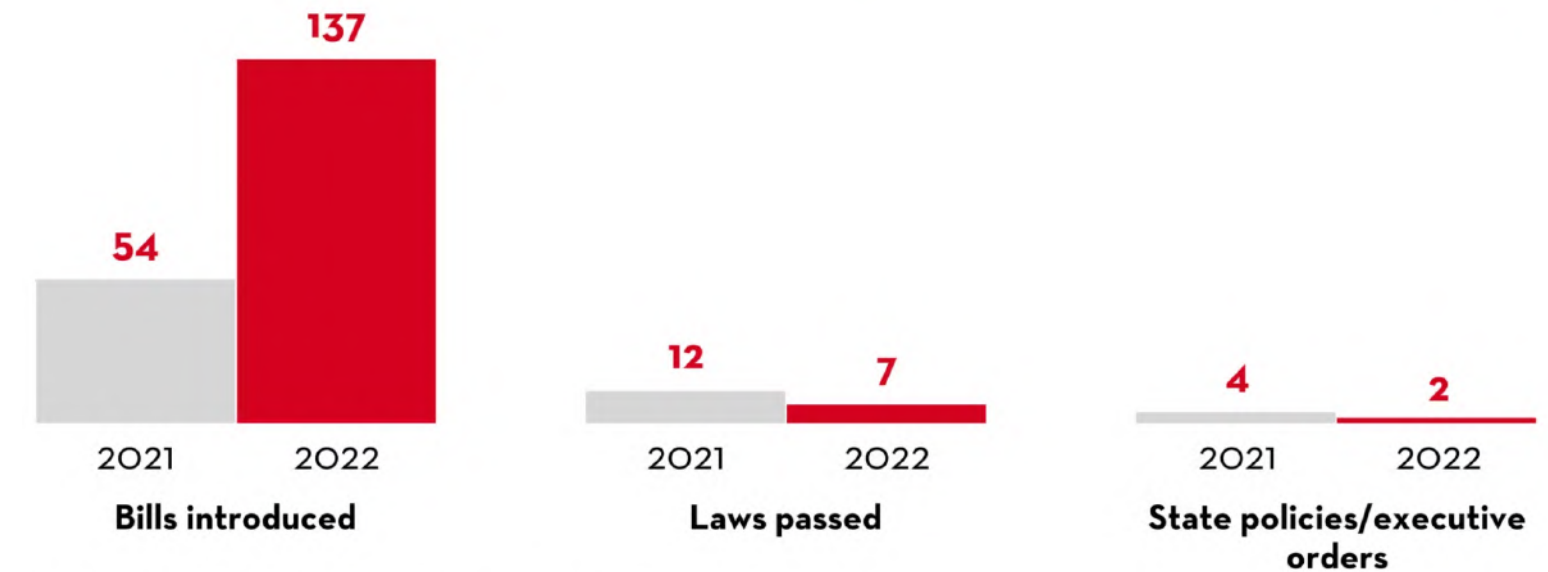

It's not just COVID

Teachers' ability to teach is being stifled, particularly around discussions of race, gender, sexuality, and US history.

"There is a legislative war on education in America. At the heart of this war are educational gag orders—state legislative attempts to restrict teaching, training, and learning in K–12 schools and higher education."

1: Source

Total Number of Educational Gag Orders

Data from PEN America Index of Educational Gag Orders, August 2022.

Percentage of Proposed Educational Gag Orders Targeting Particular Types of Institutions

Note: some bills target multiple types of institutions. Data from PEN America Index of Educational Gag Orders, August 2022.

What we can do

Systemic challenges like lack of adequate pay, politically fraught situations, or the need for various support staff are beyond Gale's or any private organization's scope.

But other burnout factors we can and should tackle.

Simplify

Minimize friction and difficulty in finding and vetting lesson plans and resources, and aligning them to state standards.

Align

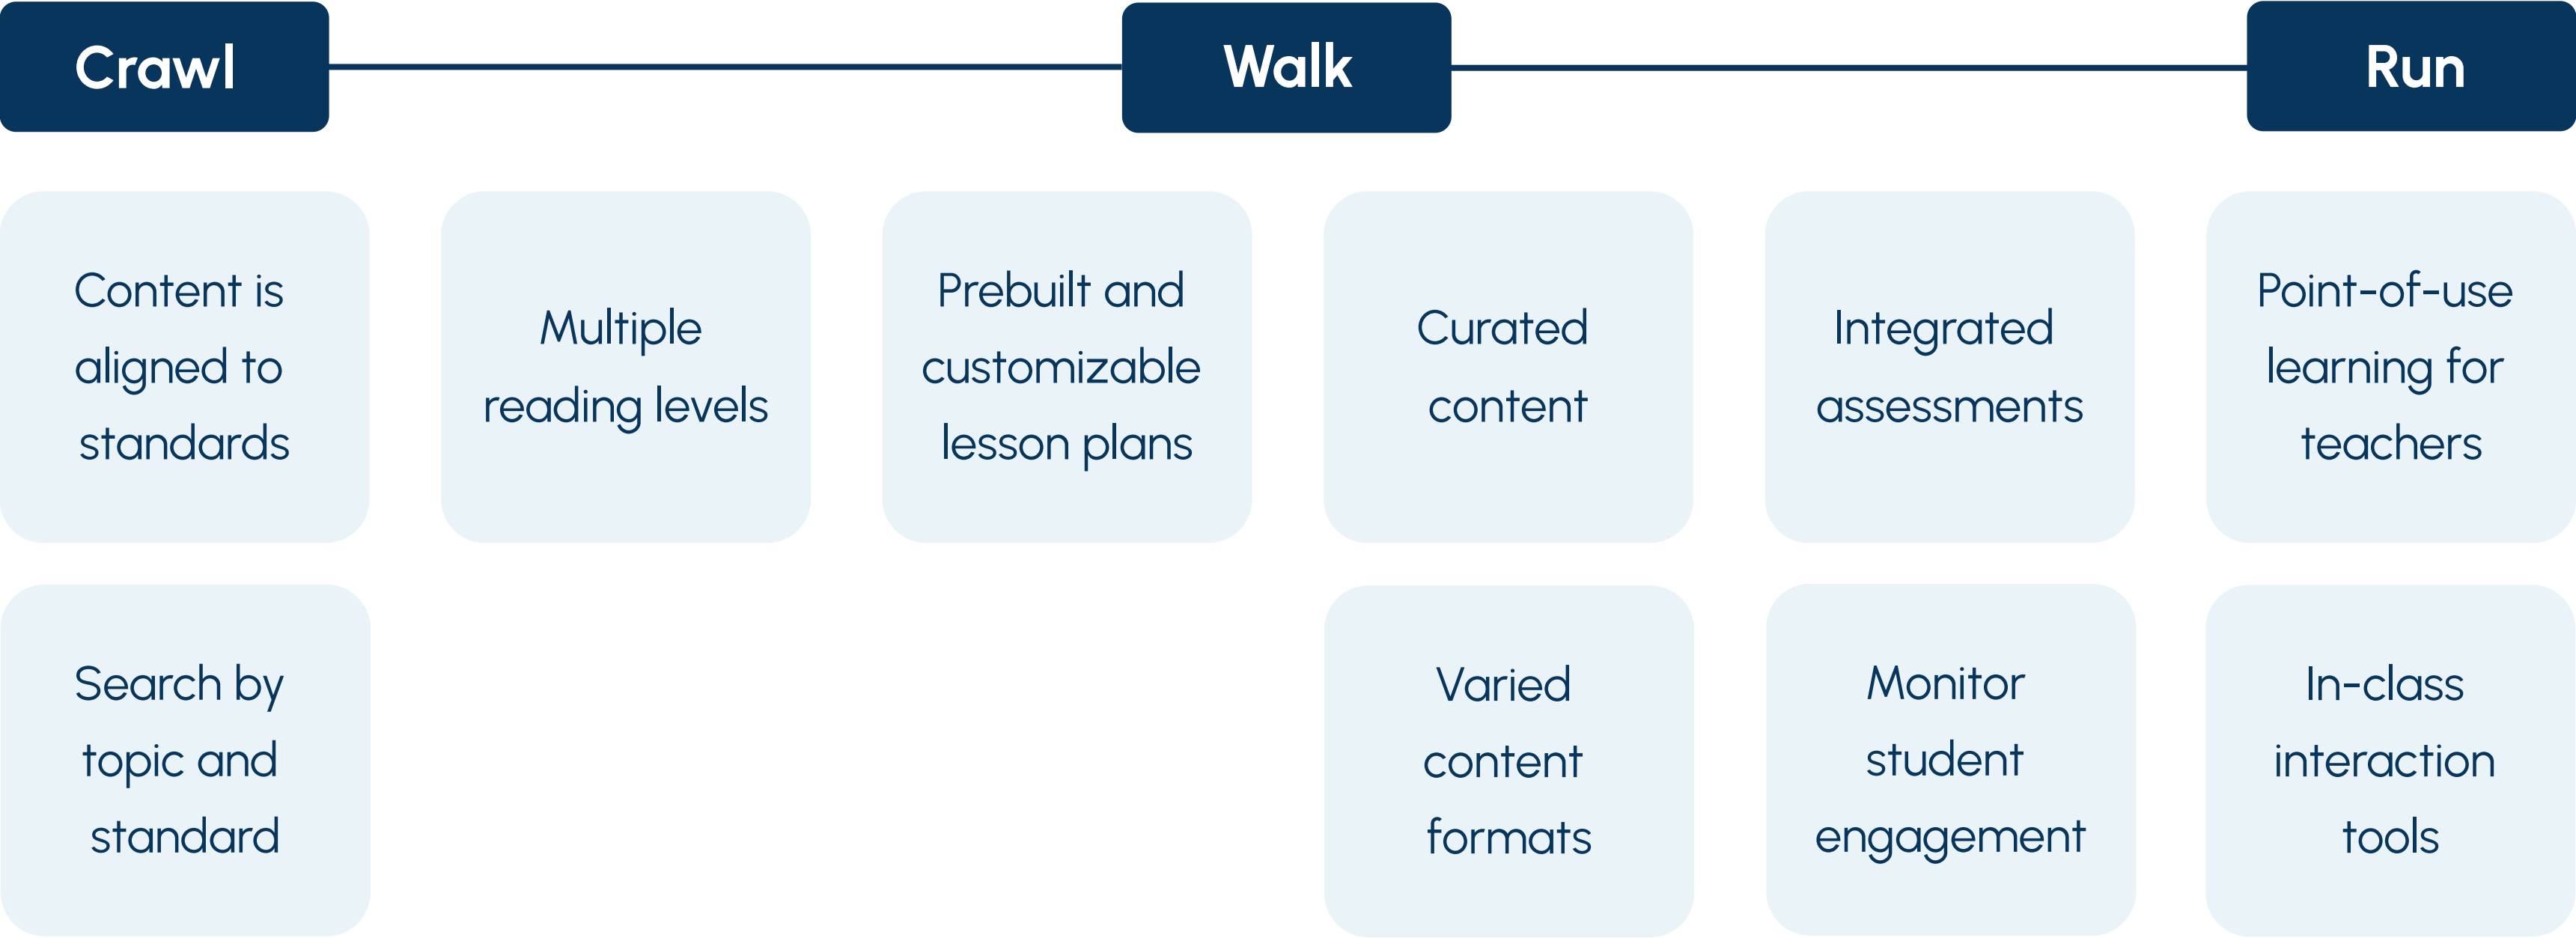

Meet students where they are academically with AI-driven, highly differentiated resources tailored to their needs.

Build

Help teachers to build relationships with their students via Gale resources in class, and in-person.

Foundation for the future

Many of your competitors have defined table stakes for classroom usage ahead of Gale's classroom product rollout.

Opportunity mapping

